JOHN DAVIDSON ROCKEFELLER, The Richest Man in the World, Kept a Careful Accounting of All His Receipts and Expenditures.

To date Mr. Rockefeller has given To date Mr. Rockefeller has given to public benefactions the enormous sum of $120,000,000. Only a few months since he startled the world with his proposition to Congress to make of the Rockefeller Foundation a national trust—to give the public the millions he now has. How has he amassed this fortune? By systematic savings, by thrift the exercise of common sense and training his for the housewife just now, of common sense and training his mind.

His first venture as a boy was raising turkeys, which he sold, starting his fortune by saving the proceeds. At sixteen he was tramping the streets of Cleveland looking for a job, which he found as bookkeeper on the docks, receiving in all $50 for his first three months' work—dess than 75c a working day; then he was raised to $25 a month, then $500 per year. From the time he sold the turkeys he kept his accounts of money received and expended in what he is pleased today to refer to as "Ledger A." At eighteen he had saved $800, and with $1,000 borrowed from his father at 10 per cent, (being his expectancy in the senior Rockefeller's estate) he, with a young man named Clark, opened a commission house, which at the end of the first year had done a $500,000 business. Then he became interested in oil, gathered about him such men as Henry M. Flagler and John D. Archbold and at the age of fifty-five was ready to retire from business, the richest man in the world. You probably receive more in a week than young Rockefeller did in a month. Do you save even as much as he did?

Just what the nature of the conversation was has not been told to the dear public, but Paris afterwards claimed that he was peacefully talking with one partner when the other one came up behind him and swung the plpe over his head. Paris was felled to the floor, but not knocked uncon scious.

Persons on the street first became cognizant of the trouble when Paris, covered with blood and holding a handkerchief over his head, emerged from an alley from the rear of the store into Center street, down which street he hurried as rapidly as possible, a friend of his coming along af-terward with Paris' hat. New Post Toasties

You may have eaten "corn flakes" but you have never tasted any that equal the New Post Toasties.

These new flakes, madam, are crisp and flakey, and have a substance and toastie flavour, a snap and zest that make them distinctive.

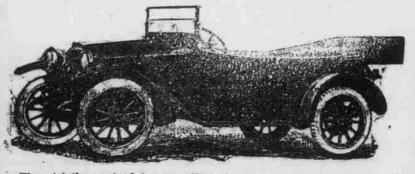

Dainty to be sure in their sweetness, the New Post Toasties have a body and firmness that don't mush down when cream or milk is added; and a true ripe-corn flavour that makes one feel that here, at last is something really new and good to eat.
